

“What Children Need Most From Their Parents”

Have you ever asked yourself what your children need most from you, their parent? What needs do they have, that if you fail to meet these would leave them handicapped throughout their lives?

From this seminar, parents will come to understand how important self-esteem, good character and self-mastery is for the future success of their children. The seminar will also discuss practical ways to develop these key qualities.

About the speaker:

John Ooi Peng Lee has had ample opportunity to develop his parenting experience, being married for 17 years and a father of six children ranging in age from toddlerhood to adolescent. He has given many presentations on family and relationship issues to children and youth as well as to educators and parents. One of his most recent talks on “How to Balance Work and Family” held in September 2001 has been well received.

John has worked as a volunteer in organizations to promote family life in Singapore for many years, and is author of Learning to Love: Questions and Answers on Human Sexuality for Teenagers. Having a technical (engineering) background and a Master of Education degree from the University of Manchester, he supports his family by working as the Head of the Total Quality management Unit at a polytechnic.
